

The Worshipful Company of Cutlers

SURGICAL PRIZE

For advances in surgical treatment utilising modern technologies, techniques and surgical innovations

THE ANCIENT GUILDS OF THE CITY OF LONDON

The ancient guilds of the City of London, more commonly referred to as livery companies, continue to flourish after a history of more than a thousand years. They were first established to regulate the various crafts and trades and at the same time created a common fellowship. Each member subscribed to a common fund; hence is derived the word gild or guild from guildan ('to pay').

THE CUTLERS' COMPANY

The first mention of the Cutlers' Company seems to be the reference in 1285 to the 'House of the Cutlers', which stood near the site of the present Mercers' Hall in Ironmonger Lane in the City of London. It is apparent that early in the 13th century the Cutlers were an organised craft and ruled under Articles granted by the Mayor and Aldermen. The business activities conducted from the House were many and defined as the making of swords, daggers, rapiers, hangers, wood knives, penknives, razors, surgeons instruments, skeynes, hilts, pommels, battle-axes, halberds, etc. Many crafts were involved, each with its own organisation and ordinances. The word 'cutler' is derived from the Latin coutellarius and the French coutelier and signifies a maker or seller of knives or other cutting instruments. The art has existed from the earliest times, when weapons for domestic use and warfare were fashioned from stone, flint, wood and bone; later, stone was replaced by bronze, and later still, by iron and steel.

SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS

The Company has a long connection with the manufacture of surgical instruments and for the last hundred years has maintained its interest by fostering apprenticeships in the surgical instrument-making industry.

THE CUTLERS' SURGICAL PRIZE

The Cutlers' Surgical Prize was instituted in 1981 and has become established as one of the most prestigious annual prizes for original innovation in the design or application of surgical instruments, equipment or practice to improve the health and recovery of surgical patients. The prize consists of an elegant mounted Victorian silver-gilt medal, together with an award of £5,000 to the winner or winning team. The presentation is made at a special dinner held at Cutlers' Hall, which will take place on 14th March 2018.

Each year, The Royal College of Surgeons will recommend a surgeon (or a team including a surgeon who has performed outstanding work in the field of instrumentation, innovation or technical development in any branch of patient investigation or treatment, which will improve patient care. The person(s) selected will be recommended for the Worshipful Company of Cutlers for approval and the award of the Cutlers' Surgical Prize.
